Children are important because they are Citizens of Today and Voters of Tomorrow. All elected representatives represent them too. All children need political social and economic commitment. As adults in the making, this is the time to determine their and the country's future.

The National Policy for Children 2013 emphasizes that "rights of children are interrelated and interdependent and each one of them is equally important and fundamental to the well-being and dignity of the child". It is time to translate documents into action so that we can make a significant change in the lives of our children.

What children need are effective institutions, equitable services and adequate resources, combined with political will and accountable leadership. This is what political leaders can promise them.

But do the manifestos of our national parties reflect this?

A quick look at the manifestos of the five national political parties, Indian National Congress (INC), Bhartiya Janta Party (BJP), Aam Admi Party (AAP), Communist Party of India (Marxist) (CPIM) and Samajwadi Party (SP) that most of them, barring the CPIM (Marxist) pay little attention to children.

CPI(M) is the only party which has talked about the critical issues like inclusion of children in the Food Security Act, better implementation of schemes for child trafficking, recognition and labour rights for Anganwadi workers and unlike other political parties, they have given a separate column for children in their manifesto. Samajwadi Party, on the other hand, has given a next to nil priority to children's issues in their manifesto.
